

SPECIAL REPORT

Subscribe

Email Story

Print Story

Discuss Story

In Depth

The death of Harry Smith III

Online Extras

- Civil case against officers goes to jury
- Police wrongful-death case going to the jury
- Defense says police use of force justified
- Witnesses get emotional in shooting trial
- Questions and answers in wrongful death case
- 'I thought he was going to kill me'
- Second ex-officer faults police shooting
- 'They were jumping and high-fiving, laughing'
- Plaintiffs rest in police wrongful-death case
- Ex-Chicago cop faults police on fatal shooting

Top StoryChat

- Gunman who killed 32 had 'very serious but very calm look' - 141 Comments
- Sensitive to sound, inventor aims to a

HOME > LOCAL

Jury finds in favor of officers in wrongful death case

By SEAN O'SULLIVAN, The News Journal

Posted Tuesday, April 17, 2007 at 2:58 pm

WILMINGTON — A jury today found that three Wilmington police officers did not violate the rights of a man they shot to death in 2003 after a police chase.

The wrongful-death lawsuit had been brought by the family of a man shot to death after a police chase.

The verdict brings to a close a week-long tense and emotional trial, and one not usually seen in the calm corridors of Delaware's federal courthouse.

Harry Smith III, 25, was shot and killed by three police officers Sept. 13, 2003, after he stole a police car near Wilmington Hospital and led police on a 16-block high-speed chase that ended with Smith's death at a police barricade at Fifth and Harrison streets.

Officers testified that Smith had attempted to get around the barrier, and run down Det. John Ciritella, when they opened fire. Smith had been taken to the hospital by his family that day because of mental problems.

An internal police investigation and an investigation by the Delaware Attorney General cleared the officers of any wrongdoing, but Smith's family filed this federal civil suit charging officers Ciritella along with Master Sgt. Thomas Dempsey and Sgt. Matthew Kurten with violating Smith's rights by using excessive force and illegally caused his death.

Nearly every day of the trial was well-attended while most proceedings in federal court rarely have more than the attorneys and immediate family present.

On the day of closing arguments, the courtroom was filled

Harry Smith III
News Journal file